Was not spoken of the soul.

The Pony Express is a fast mail service in the days before the country was spanned by the railroad or telegraph. The Pony Express used relays of horses, fresh horses waiting at stations located about every ten miles, all the way across the country. Each rider would make, on average, a 70-mile “run,” switching horses about six times, before he would pass his saddle-bags to the next man. Pony Express riders faced many dangers and hardships, but the motto “The mail must go through” was an urgent reality. What a great introduction to this memorable era in American history!
